

Carry a Poem or Song in your Pocket

You can cut out the poem or song that we have provided for you below or you can copy or write one of your own! Carry the Poem or Song in Your Pocket Day is Monday, March 15th.

The Monsters' Musical Contest

When the musical contest for monsters convened,
the Wolfman was howling and played like a fiend.
Then Dracula jammed, but flew into a rage
when Frankenstein's torch singing lit up the stage.

The Mummy, he rapped with the aid of a band,
but stopped when The Blob ate his microphone stand.
The Blob, by the way, also swallowed The Fly.
(I don't know why he swallowed The Fly.)

The Creature that came from that famous lagoon was booed by the ghosts when he sang out of tune.
Dr. Jekyll had stage fright and ran off to hide, while Igor sang love songs to Frankenstein's Bride.

The Thing did impressions. The Boogey-Man danced.
The Zombie just stood there, completely entranced.
The Invisible Man played his air guitar well, but no one could see him so no one could tell.

They played through the night having oodles of fun,
but couldn't determine which monster had won.
And so they decided they'd have to convene and do it again on the next Halloween.

--Kenn Nesbitt

Reading Rocks! @ Stratford Road

PARP 2010